Subject: UPDATE FROM TY, MAY 7

Over the past few weeks, several of us across CHPRC have been working with DOE, the other Site contractors and union leadership on what remobilization could look like. I appreciate everyone's help in this complex undertaking.

It is important to remember this will be a process that may evolve and will happen over time; it won't be immediate. It will also require all of us to be flexible and patient as we learn to adjust to new ways of doing business. Thank you in advance for your understanding.

I want to thank those involved in this remobilization planning and implementation effort. I was out in the field this week where work is well underway on reconfiguring offices and workspaces to accommodate social distancing. This is one example of how we will return to a different type of working environment.

Please remember this external website is available for your use. As remobilization nears, we will update it with information about the precautions you will see as you return to the workplace and the types of work that we plan for each phase.

Finally, remain vigilant about your physical and emotional health. While we are seeing some parts of our community opening back up to the extent permitted, be mindful of your continued need to protect yourselves by social distancing, limiting gatherings and using face coverings where needed. Remember as well to remain connected to each other and your management team.

Stay in touch, and stay safe.
