Subject: STAY SAFE; STAY CONNECTED

The temperatures finally caught up to the calendar this week – we saw and felt the triple-digit temperatures that we previously were lucky to avoid so far this year. I know this makes work difficult, uncomfortable and potentially hazardous, so I appreciate you taking the steps needed to avoid heat stress. It looks like it will continue to be warm next week. Take care of yourself, including at home. Proper hydration starts before you arrive at work.

Next week, CHPRC will hold our on-site headcount pretty closely to our current state, as we seek to ensure our projects remain safe and we make progress where possible, while conserving personal protective equipment and taking into account case rates and health care capacity in our area.

Whether you remain at home or return to the workplace, please don't become complacent to the controls meant to protect your health. Social distancing remains important in lunch and meeting rooms. Remember to minimize ride-sharing in vehicles and wear face coverings inside.

The same reminder is necessary for operating vehicles. We've seen an increase in vehicle-related incidents on Site recently. Perform a 360 and use a spotter to make sure you don't hit the things that can't get out of your way.

The vehicle incidents may be a sign of distraction, and there are a lot of them out there. During this time, as it's always been, focus on what you can control: your safety and that of your coworkers.

Keep in touch, and I thank you all for what you do.
